What skills are employers looking for?

Here are some suggestions:

Communication and Literacy

What examples can you give that demonstrate your ability to communicate well? Are you a keen debater at home or with your friends?

Do you enjoy making presentations? How well do you write? Do you enjoy writing—perhaps keeping a diary or a blog? Think of all the different ways you can demonstrate your communication and literacy skills.

Team Working

Do you like working in groups? Are you a good team player or even a team leader? What evidence can you use to highlight your team working skills? This might be from home or work; in sports or hobbies; or perhaps in the classroom.

Problem Solving

Employers love problem solvers so it's worth thinking about what challenges you have overcome in the past and perhaps explaining how you go about solving problems. Are you a critical thinker? Do you have an eye for detail? Are you good at seeing the" wood from the trees" (the bigger picture)? Can you spot mistakes and know how to put them right? Can you "think on your feet"?

Business and Customer Awareness

What experience do you have of the business world and in particular customer care? At the very least you will have been a customer yourself in many different situations. What have you learned from this customer experience? How often are you delighted with the service you are given? What makes good customer service? It's a good idea to show employers that at least you have thought about this and that you appreciate the need for high quality customer service.

Making the Most of Work Experience

Have you undertaken any work experience before? This might be some family connected work or a part-time paper round. Or it may be something you have done through the college. What did you learn and what aspects of your work experience do you think would most impress employers? If you haven't had any work experience to date, think about what you would like to gain from a trial job. And what skills can you bring to an employer willing to give you a chance? How enthusiastic will you be? You might think it's not worth saying these things, but how else will an employer know whether you are the person for the job?

Prepare a short sentence which encapsulates your approach to work and add this into your CV.

Unit 1 Tasks - Self and Work

Unit 1.1 CV Writing

Have you ever produced your own CV (Curriculum Vitae)? If not, now is the time to start! If you've already prepared one, you now need to update this as part of your work placement preparation. Ensure that your CV is relevant to the work you hope to be doing now. Attach your new CV to this workbook. The filename should contain your name, date of production, and 'CV' (e.g. Joe Bloggs CV Nov 2017).

Unit 1.2 Character Strengths

Take a look at the 8 character strengths below, and decide which ones you are most likely to develop in the next few months. You might also think about which character strengths will be most critical for a work placement. In the box below, explain why?

8 Character Strengths	Tick which ones you expect to develop in the next three months	Tick which ones are most critical for a work placement
Resilience
Optimism
Curiosity
Confidence Ownership
Self-control
Ambition
Respect

Explain why you have picked certain character strengths and not others. How will you measure your development of these character strengths?

Unit 1.3 Employer Perspectives

Employers value an employee who	What you can do shows initiative	Get a part-time job or do some voluntary work.
takes care in what they do	Fill in your application form clearly, look smart at the interview and always be on time.
is keen and enthusiastic	When applying for a job, think carefully about how you put yourself across. Once you're working, always appear willing.
has employability or transferable skills	Think about something you've done at school or in your spare time that shows how you've used a skill. This could include giving presentations or playing a team sport.
is adaptable	Show examples of how you've adapted to change, such as leaving school. Make it clear that you're willing to learn new skills.
can work well in a team	Use examples from school or out-of-school to show how you can get on with others.
is reliable	Once you've got a job or apprenticeship place turn up on time every day. Ring into work if you're unwell (but not just a sore throat) to let them know you won't be coming in.

Look at the table above and reflect on your progress in Unit 1 so far. To what extent are you meeting employer needs? You might want to go back over Unit 1.1 and 1.2 and make some changes which reinforce your employability skills.

You will be pleased to know it's not all one way! This isn't just about what you can do for employers but also about what employers can do for you.

It is important that you make the most of work experience and you find out as much about the organisation you are working for as possible.

Find out what different roles exist in the organisation. Create your own organisation chart (organogram) to reflect what you have learnt and show this to your supervisor for comment and feedback. Once you are satisfied with the organogram insert it in the box on the following page.

Insert your Organogram here

Identify six different skills or qualifications required for roles in the organisation (you can have more than one skill or qualification for a single position for example the owner of the business may need good accounting skills as well as excellent human resource management skills.)
